About Crown Worldwide Group

The Crown Worldwide story began in 1965

A young American named Jim Thompson (then residing in Japan), recognized the need for a reputable international moving service. With only US$ 1,000 in his bank account, Mr. Thompson established a small company in Yokohama, Japan. In its formative years, Transport Services International (as it was then known) had only one office. Hard work and a focus on providing quality services allowed the company to prosper.

By 1970, the company had reached Hong Kong, and as the company went from one success to another so did its expansion. After Hong Kong came offices in Singapore, Indonesia, Malaysia and other Asia Pacific locations.

In 1975, Transport Services International became Crown Pacific, and by the early '80s was established as the leading mover in Asia. The increase in mobility of the global population saw further growth for the company. Offices were established across the Americas, Australasia and Europe. The list of services expanded to offer full relocation and mobility services.

Expansion was accompanied by a new name, reflecting the company's geographic scope. Crown Pacific was now Crown Worldwide.

In the years since, the Crown Worldwide Group has continued to grow through organic expansion and further acquisition. Its growth has expanded the reach of its business, including diversification into other services, including World Mobility, Relocations, Records Management, Fine Art, Logistics and Wine Cellars. The most recent strategic expansion is Crown Workspace, which focuses on a tailored approach to office, interior fit-outs and commercial relocations.

"It's been very exciting, in just over 50 years of development, the most rewarding aspect of it all is that the Crown Group today enjoys a solid financial position, excellent management and staff, and a steady pattern of growth and development. Our records management and fine art businesses have also expanded globally at a very solid pace." (Jim Thompson, Chairman.)

The Crown Worldwide Group is an industry leader in each of its business divisions. The company is committed to moving forward by providing consistent quality service throughout its worldwide operations.
